

Activities galore at Town Festival

following an outdoor worship service in the Park, Sunday. They were presented with gifts by Town Mayor Fran Sainsbury.

The Stouffville Buttermakers hosted a 32-team Slo-Pitch Tournament Friday through Sunday. On Saturday, Mr and Mrs Strawberry decided to get into the act. The Festival mascots are, in reality, Colleen Scott and Tammie Kelso of Altona.

Margaret Grandison, Church Street North, Stouffville, was selling strawberry hats, sweaters, shorts and buttons, Saturday in the Park.

She also took time out to taste a few berries, figuring she'd earned a lunch break for all her hard work.

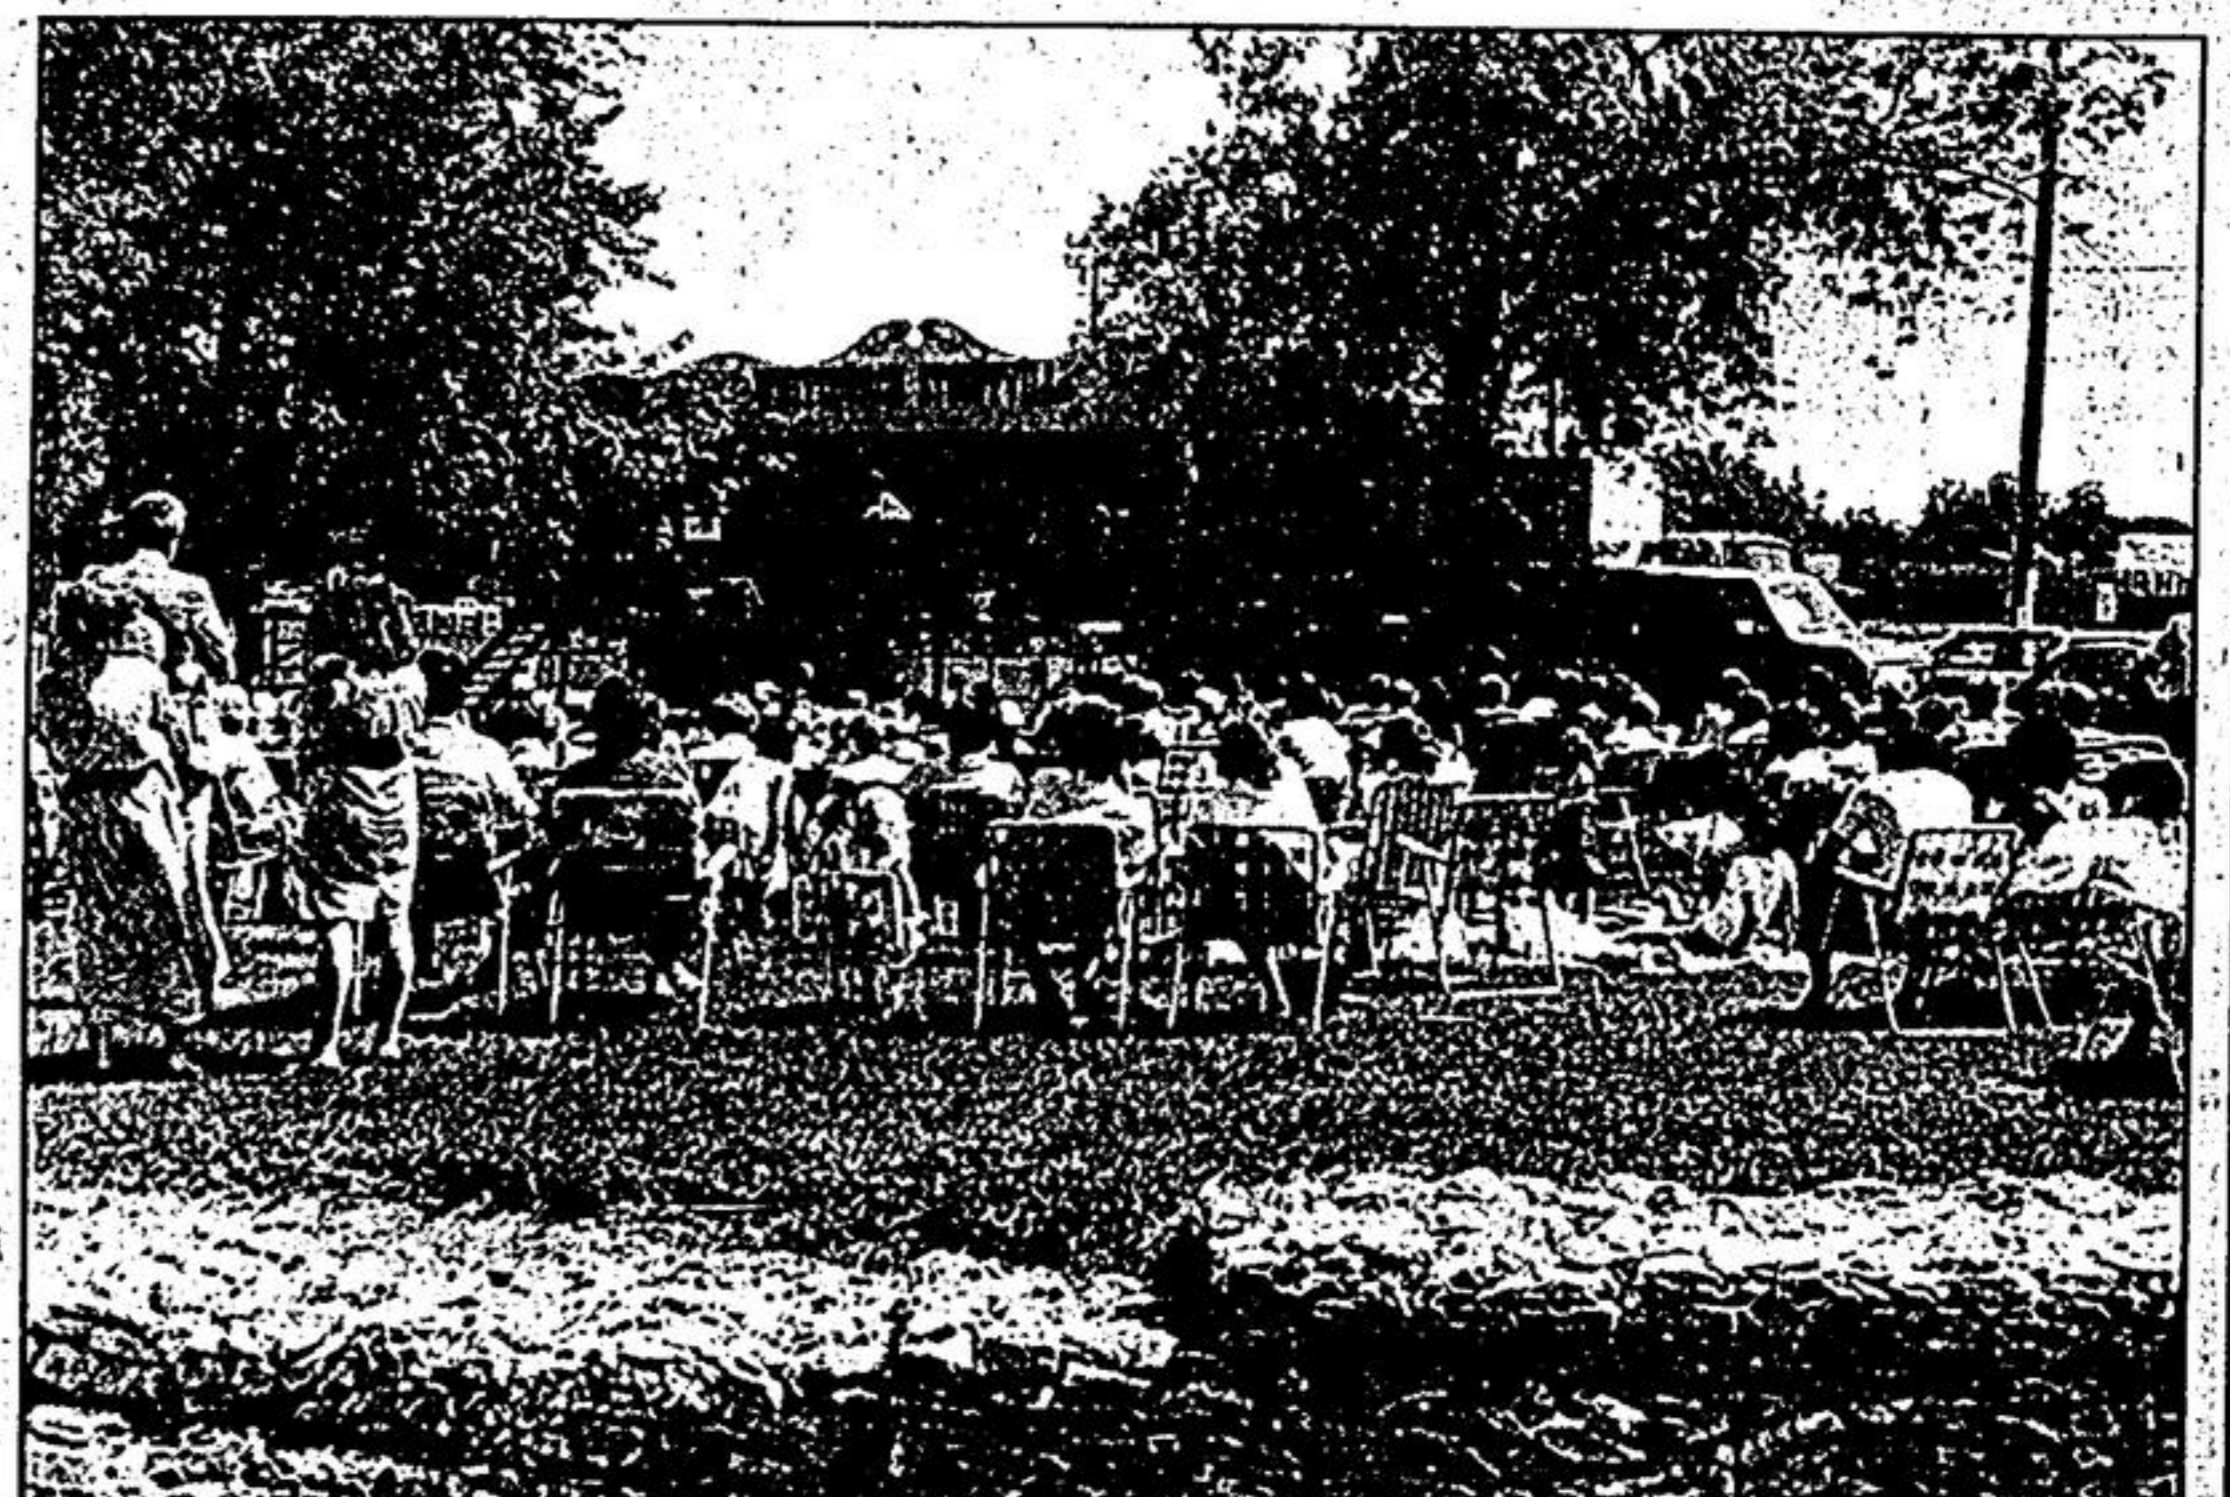

Lynda Collett of R.R. 3, Claremont, entered 'Silver' a pet raccoon in the Pet Contest, Saturday.

It won a red ribbon for the 'smallest entry' in the show.

Balloons will always be popular with kids. Owners of Country Tyme Realty Ltd., Main Street East, Stouffville, are aware of this. Proof is in the happy faces of Randy Nicholls, 5, and Tara Marshman, 7, Aspen Crescent, Stouffville. —Jim Thomas

A congregation of more than a thousand people attended the Community Worship Service in the Stouffville Park, Sunday. The message was deli-
