Cut flowers speak a special language

By ELAINE GORDON
Cut flowers speak a special language — miss you, forgive me, get well, congratulations, thanks so much.

Whether received as a delightful posy that takes your breath away or as an armful that runs the full gamut of color, the sun is brought inside to perk up overcast days. And hearts, too, for they are indeed universal messengers of love and memories.

To prolong their fresh look, recut the stems on a slant under water with a sharp knife or scissors (stems could clog if a dull utensil is used). This allows water to flow freely if the stems rest on vase bottoms. Bacteria is promoted by decaying leaves so it's wise to remove any foliage below the vase's waterline.

To trigger your imagination, accessories from humble beginnings like a cup and saucer, sugar bowl, teapot, creamer, beanpot are of decorative interest as containers. A water-filled soup tureen, crystal bowl or antique pottery are given new purpose when, for example, a resplendent peony flower floats inside. Even a toothpick cap, spray bottle cap or a thimble can hold a tiny flower for a dollhouse table.

Perhaps you have a large mouthed vase and want arrangements to stand upright — just place transparent tape across the top in a lattice fashion and insert stems in openings. Works every time. Or, you might try a plastic mesh, berry basket — just cut-to-fit, place upside down in the vase base and set stems in the open squares.

If stems are too short for a tall vase — lengthen them by inserting in plastic straws, or place marbles or pebbles on the vase base and fill in accordingly until stems are accommodated.

Cut flowers are best placed in an airy, cool, draft-free spot.
