Teacher meetings
may be out-dated

STOUFFVILLE — Have Meet-the-Teacher-Nights had their day? Some mothers attending a parent-principal discussion at Summitview School, Friday, felt they had.

One parent claimed four weeks into the fall term is too short a period for a teacher to get to know his/her students. Another said the allotted time that evening is insufficient for parents to greet members of staff.

One mother claimed some parents monopolize the teacher's time by discussing their children's strengths and weaknesses at length, leaving no time for others.

One parent praised the Curriculum Night arranged by staff teacher Joyce Caudle. She described it as "really super."

Principal Lorne Boadway suggested that rather than discontinuing the event completely, the concept should be re-examined so the evening is made more purposeful for everyone.
