

Markham school officially opened

Students have been attending Markham's St. Edward Separate School (located in the Raymerville subdivision) since September, but the facility was only officially opened on Tuesday. Above, guests applaud a limited-edition print given to the school by neighboring Ramer Wood Public School. Guests are (left to right) builder Ralph Aquino, architect John Robbick, Town of Markham Chief Administrative Officer Joe Pickard, MPP Don Cousens, Mac Shiner of the Ministry of Education, Father Miro of St. Patrick's Church, Bishop Robert Clune, Father Jobin of St. Patrick's Church, and separate school board Director of Education John Zupancic.

Holding them high

St. Edward students (from left) Ulanda Niel, Simon Chen and Renaldo Cullura look a little tired as they hold up crosses and bibles to be blessed by Bishop Clune. Markham Trustee Terry Ryan was the official opening's master of ceremonies.

Children in the St. Edward choir provided some musical entertainment and also sang the national anthem. The school is named after Edward the Confessor, king of England 900 years ago.
