DECIDUOUS SHRUBS

Deciduous shrubs include a wide selection of plants. Most are fast-growing and provide interest in the landscape from the first season. They all shed their leaves at the end of the growing season and remain leafless during the dormant (winter) period.

Many have colorful flowers while others are noted for their attractive foliage. Use deciduous shrubs for borders, screens and foundation plantings.

FRUITS

Growing your own fruit will provide plentiful and delicious fruit for cooking, canning, freezing or fresh use. The kinds of fruits you choose will depend on your preferences and space restrictions.

Tree grown fruits include apples, peaches, citrus, cherries, and pears. These are generally available as standard, semi-dwarf, and dwarf. The dwarfs (usually the result of grafting) produce less yield per plant but their smaller size permits the homeowner to grow several kinds of trees in a smaller area.

Fruits called berries are often grown on shrubs or small plants. These include raspberries, blueberries, blackberries and strawberries. Berries generally require less space and care for good production.

BROADLEAVED EVERGREENS

Broadleaved evergreens are prized plants in any landscape. They have relatively broad leaves (not needle leaved) that remain green all year. Many are doubly valued because of their magnificent flowers or berries.

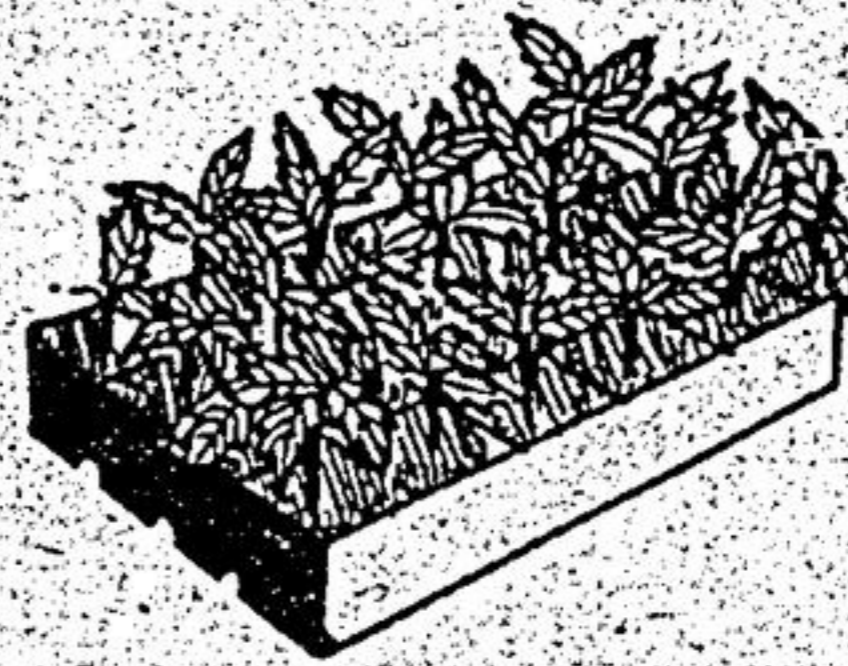

Use broadleaved evergreens for accents, foundation plantings and borders.
