Interference is resented

Dear Editor: On Jan. 7, you published a letter from me concerning sanctions and propoganda against South Africa. In it, I stressed the stupidity and hypocrisy of those people and governments who decided on these measures and that these penalties only created the opposite effect to that which was desired. This past week, the white South

Africans in their election returned a government which will be even more right wing and Apartheid than the outgoing one. In my opinion, the result is a denied reaction to the continual interference by governments and other bodies, telling another sovereign country how to run its own affairs. This attitude only makes the recipient of such advice all the more determined to continue on its intransigent way. It should have been obvious to any one-eyed donkey that the measures taken would have the opposite effect.

All countries resent this kind of advice from outsiders who do not have to live with their problems. It is the natural reaction and on a more personal basis, one would resent any neighbor telling you that they didn't like your life-style and that you were bringing up your children in the wrong way.

If this sanctimonious "holier than thou" attitude is adopted it has to be consistent. We don't hear or read any great indignation at the treatment meted out to Chileans in their own country. Only the Pope had the moral courage to criticize openly the behavior of the Government when he was recently on a visit to that country. Where are the sanctions against Russia for her invasion of Afghanistan. Oh, I forgot! Athletes were banned from taking part in certain sporting events and there was a boycott of the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh because the British Government had the sense to see that blackmailing tactics do not work. In these cases of sanctions and boycotts it was only the athletes that suffered.

If changes have to be made in a country, that change has to come from within by the people themselves. Thanks to the interference by foreign countries in the domestic affairs of South Africa, it looks as if freedom for the black person is farther away than ever.

Sincerely,
Adam Johnstone

Summitview Music Night appreciated.

Students display talents ---their principal too

The staff and students of Stouffville's Summitview Public School held their third annual Music Night, May 13, before an appreciative audience. For Principal Lorne Boadway, (above), it was his final event of this kind. A song, sung as a tribute, was followed by a standing ovation. Mr. Boadway then accompanied the children on the piano with the Summitview Song. The senior choir members, (right) are Heidi Black, (left), and Lindsay Lesser. The senior choir was directed by Julia Topping. The primary choir was led by Linda Christensen. ---Jim Thomas
