

Early Childhood Education course includes student day care program

By JIM THOMAS
STOUFFVILLE — Is it a sign of the times — day care at Stouffville Dist. Secondary School?

If students enrolled in Early Childhood Education have their way, the experimental program will become permanent. They enjoyed every minute of the four-day 'experience'.

"It was a total student responsibility," staff teacher Ann Wilson told The Tribune. The children, ranging in age from 2 to 5 years, numbered between 20 and 25 on a particular day. They participated in a variety of activities, both inside the school and out.

Barb Gourley, one of 13 student supervisors, said she enjoyed the involvement so much, she'll be sorry to graduate.

"I think it (day care) should become a specific subject," she said, "it was a great experience for both the children and ourselves."

The in-school training was considered last year, Barb explained, but the suggestion came too late to be implemented. "I hope it continues," she said.

Initially, a few of the kiddies cried when separated from their mothers. "But they soon got over it," Barb said.

Other student supervisors were Tammy Anderson, Laura Campbell, Corrie Ellis, Maria Doria, Sara Hales, Melissa Faulkner, Tracy Dudley, Yvonne Holden, Colleen Wideman, Laura Moore, De-Anne Denholme and Cheryl Robinson.

The majority of kiddies are sons and daughters of staff, plus nieces and nephews. One had to be bottle-fed. Changing diapers proved no problem.

While each child was furnished with a name tag, by the end of the fourth day, this form of identification wasn't needed.

"We became very attached," Barbara concluded.

Unsightly

Dear Editor:

So our mayor's going to read the Garbage Act if the downtown doesn't keep its refuse off the street on weekends.

Good for her.

Lately, it's been a mess—in certain areas. One of these is the location at the corner of Edward Street and Main, (near the Mansion House Hotel).

Personally, I think the only long-term solution is to establish garbage pick-up seven days a week.

Sincerely,
Patricia Gallagher,
Millard Street,
Stouffville
