Religion, science to merge

Dear Sir,
 Congratulations to the Rev. Dave Petrescue for his article in the May 23 Weekender "Human hearts not the source of love."

His article says that even if you have one of the cleverest intellects in the world you will never find love in a material part of the body — in a chemical reaction, in the heart, in a biological urge. You will find it only in God.

It is absolutely shocking that in a great scientific civilization where there have been ever greater explosions of scientific knowledge and research in all areas including medical knowledge and the brain, we still say that the human heart is the location and source of love, feelings, courage, character.

Or even more shockingly, we say that science tells us that these inner human, non-material, urges simply do not and cannot exist.

What does the dictionary say about the heart? Webster's Collegiate (1981): "4: the emotional or moral as distinguished from the intellectual nature: as... compassion, love, affection... courage"

How can such profound ignorance (or error) exist in a society that knows so much, in such great detail, about everything?

Surely the only answer that makes sense is that we insist on using only tools, techniques, attitudes, theories, that are inappropriate to the nature of what we are looking for.

Surely love, feelings, character, courage, ideals, while often involving the body, are centred largely on the right brain (not in the heart or in the intellect).

So why do we not look there for these new, non-verbal, non-intellectual, methods of communication and understanding?

Some researchers are now doing this with some success. Although some researchers in "cognitive psychology" are more into a new-intellectualism married to what a computer can do.

Roger Sperry, 1981 Nobel Prize winner for split brain research, has rejected the materialist doctrine of the twentieth century science.

He says that consciousness, free will and values — which were previously denied existence by science — are now recognized to have existence.

He says that the higher properties of mind and consciousness are in command, they "call the plays".

We need a blending of the "new science" with traditional, non-permissive religion (which has power and insight unmatched by science in many areas), all to a new and greater awareness of the universe and eternity.

Catholic church unfair to girls

Dear Sir,
 Re: Females not allowed at Markham alters (last Weekender)

The remarks attributed to a local priest who wishes to remain anonymous fail to dress the issue. The problem is not created by a parish (Sacre Coeur) that allegedly broke the rule or by the silent majority that does not complain.

Nor did it come from the fact that many countries are not prepared to accept female altar servers (therefore the Vatican rules against it).

It was created by what 11-year-old Miss Bernier, in her God-given unpolluted mind has understood so clearly and so vividly: the Church is simply unfair towards the female half of humanity. The truth still comes out of the mouths of little children (male or female) or the gods must be crazy.
