

New owner Marie Adams

Sweet changes for donut shop

By DENISE McDONALD
Stouffville resident Marie Adams' new business venture has several small holes in it. On December 1, Mrs. Adams officially assumed ownership of Country Club Donuts, adjacent to B.J.'s Variety plaza, formerly owned by Ampy and Carlos Raguda of Toronto. "It's definitely a different type of business than I've ever run before," she said. Mrs. Adams, who also owns and operates the Christian Supply Store on Main Street, said she initially heard of the store's impending sale from the owners. "I use to pop in there every once and while and got to know them very well," she said. "I can't remember exactly how I first heard about it, I think Ampy must have mentioned it to me." After a lot of "careful thinking and consideration," Mrs. Adams suddenly found herself in the donut business. "I enjoy meeting people," she said. "And I see the donut store as a beautiful opportunity to serve the people in this community."

the donut shop's age-old menu. "We're still going to feature donuts as the main selection, but add some lines of cookies, muffins and sandwiches and soup," she said. "You wouldn't believe how many people have been in in the last few days who've said they wished we served sandwiches."

Although Mrs. Adams has only been operating the store for a very short while, she claimed she has a number of in-store improvements on the block. "I'll be making some structural changes and a few cosmetic as well," she said. "But basically I'd like to see it re-decorated and generally cleaned up."

While Mrs. Adams said the proximity of her Christian Supply store to the donut shop makes running both stores workable, she said she will employ staff to work in both while she is away tending to one or the other.

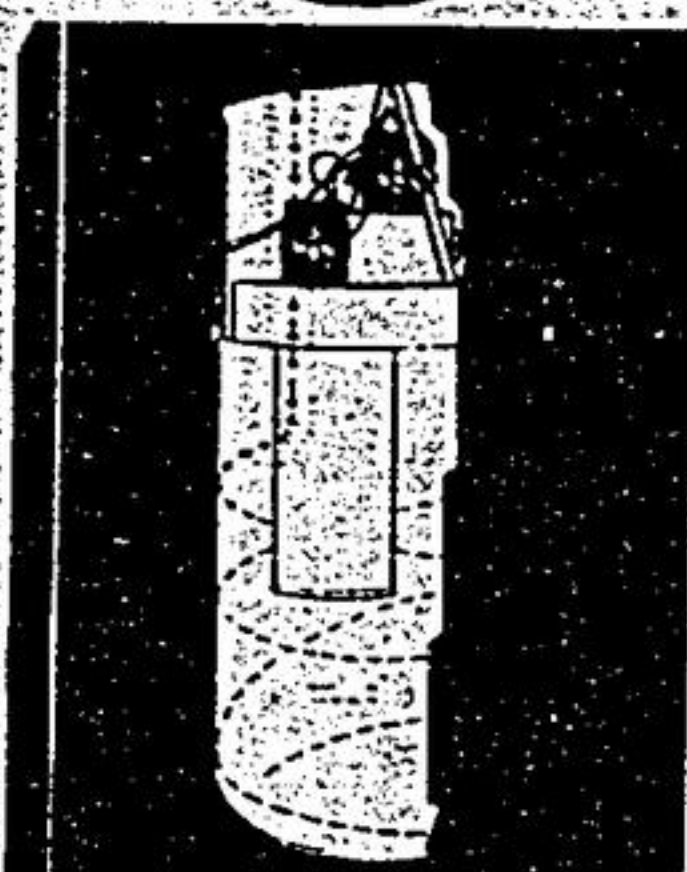

However, Mrs. Adams biggest endeavor will be to change

"My main goal is to keep it a family oriented shop," she added. "I want it be a very friendly place, with a warm attitude and appearance."
