Claremont lassie Emily dances for joy

By JIM THOMAS
CLAREMONT — Eleven-year-old Emily Marks was accorded enthusiastic applause following her dance, Dec. 6, at the Lions-sponsored Claremont Christmas Show.
Unknown to most, this is only one of many talents possessed by this pretty William Street girl. She plays the piano, takes swimming lessons, belongs to the Girl Guides and plays on the volleyball team at Claremont Public School.
She's a student in Grade 6. Art is a favorite subject.
While Emily no longer takes Highland dance lessons, she's never lost interest.
"I still enjoy it," she says. She has many trophies and medals as proof of her skill.
The Sailor's Hornpipe, and 'The Jig' are favorites. She has four different outfits.
In competition, Emily usually danced to bagpipes. At the Claremont Show, she used a tape.
Emily is the daughter of John and Karen Marks. She has a younger brother, John.
While she still has several education years to go, Emily has her sights set on becoming a lawyer.
She attends Sunday School at Claremont United Church.
Claremont is a community with many talent young people.
Eleven-year-old Emily Marks is one.
Her talents are appreciated. The audience response Dec. 6 said it all.
