Jason Redshaw has a booming business going. He gardens and clearing snow. He's so busy he has to work summer and winter cutting grass, tilling, turn down new business.

Jason Redshaw

High school student is busy in his spare time

JIM THOMAS
The grass doesn't grow under Jason Redshaw's feet. But his business is growing — continually. He's Claremont's lawn and garden caretaker. Sixteen-year-old Jason, a Grade 10 student at Pickering High School, started out by using his grandfather's tractor and mower. He later purchased a tractor of his own, a $6,000

Bolems, the cost of which he paid off in a single year. Associated equipment includes a trailer, a roto-tiller, a snowblower and a roller. Jason works after school and on Saturdays. He also holds a part-time job at the Claremont Co-op. With nine regular customers, some of the same both summer and winter, Jason has little time to himself. He's had to turn down several requests.

Periods of inclement weather create problems, Jason says. He's forced to catch up when conditions improve. On occasions his 11-year-old brother Tyler lends a hand. Claremont home-owners especially those of senior years praise Jason's efficiency and enthusiasm. "I couldn't get along without him," one resident told The Tribune.
