'Girl Next Door'

Trish works high above city traffic

By JIM THOMAS
Trish Burkholder sits on top of the world. That's how it seems as she looks out from the 72nd floor of Toronto's Bank of Montreal. "The view is beautiful," says the 19-year-old window-washer. "On a clear day I can see Niagara Falls. The C.N.E. air show was exciting." She's our 'Girl Next Door'. While gliding up and down the outside of a Toronto skyscraper, 150 feet in the air, is everyone's idea of a full-time job. Trish enjoys it. "I love it," she says, "rather than asphalt and concrete. I see parks and trees. The view, she explains, gives one a whole new perspective of the big city. She's employed by Federated Building Maintenance. Trish is the youngest in the family of Howard and Ruth Burkholder, Second Street, Stouffville. She has two older brothers, Chris and Steve. Prior to taking up residence in town, Trish attended high school at Bolton. She's a graduate of S.D.S.S. Interests include reading, travelling, batik and tie-dye. She hopes to get into scuba diving and parachute jumping. "Anything related sky and water," she explains. Next year she plans to back-pack across Europe. Modest concerning her musical abilities, Trish plays both the piano and guitar. She describes herself as "mostly a shower-singer." With respect to her present vocation, Trish minimizes the hazards. She rides up and down buildings' exteriors in a cage equipped with safety belts. "Should a fuse blow, we summon assistance with walkie-talkies," she says. The cage can accommodate three people. Each person washes two windows at a piece. It takes about two hours to go from top to bottom, depending on the height of the building. Very few girls choose this occupation, she says. "But I feel at home up there."

Nineteen-year-old Trish Burkholder, Second Street, Stouffville, works high above the chaos of downtown Toronto traffic. She's a window-washer on the staff of Federated Building Maintenance. At the 72-storey level of the Bank of Montreal, Trish can see Buffalo and Niagara Falls. —Jim Thomas

Whole Lotta Bacon Goin' On

McDonald's® Bacon Double Cheeseburgers!

Two 100% pure beef patties, a slice of process cheese and a whole lotta bacon. That's the mouth-watering taste of McDonald's® Bacon Double Cheeseburgers. And they're just $1.89!

But hurry, after October 10th, the bacon'll be gone!
