For spring color Plant flower bulbs now

Tulips, crocuses, daffodils, hyacinths — to ensure that your garden is full of brightly flowering bulbs in March, April and May, plant flower bulbs before the first heavy frost. This year, in addition to the old favorites, try fritillaria, muscari, galanthus (snowdrops), chionodoxa (glory-of-the-snow) and some of the less known bulbs. They are really hardy, which means they'll bloom year after year.

Flower bulb planning is simple. All of the nutrients the flower needs are present in the bulb, so it's hard to make a mistake; just follow these basic steps to enjoy a beautiful spring!

- Select firm, high-quality Dutch bulbs, small nicks and loose skins will not affect the quality of the flower.
- Ensure well drained soil. Virtually any type will do as long as it is loose and porous. To improve drainage, add organic matter such as peat moss or compost by as much as 50 per cent of the volume of the upturned soil. Also, try planting in raised beds.
- Add fertilizer at the bottom of the planting hole. If you forget, apply it as a top dressing and work lightly into the soil. Water and melting snow will dissolve it and carry it down to the roots. Use a slow-release fertilizer, for example, containing nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium in the ratio 9-9-6.

- Plant bulbs twice as deep as their height. Light bulbs (eg. tulips, daffodils, etc.) should be spaced 10 to 15 cm (4" to 6") apart; little bulbs (eg. crocus, muscari, squills, etc.) should be 5 to 8 cm apart (2" to 3").

- Once bulbs are in position, cover them with half the dug out soil and water thoroughly. Add the remaining upturned soil until ground is level and water again. (Since bulbs grow even after the ground has frozen, watering ensures adequate moisture for their growth.)
- Cover with a 10 cm (approx. 4") layer of organic mulch — leaves, straw, etc. Keep soil moist, particularly during dry spells. (Mid-winter thaws — not the cold — are the enemy of hardy bulbs, sometimes causing them to start growing far too early. Mulch minimizes the danger, especially where the snow cover is variable.)

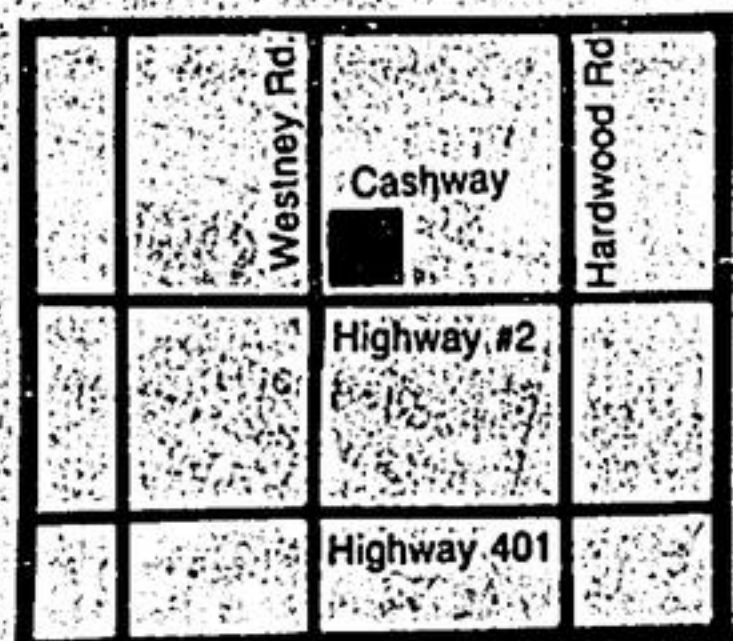

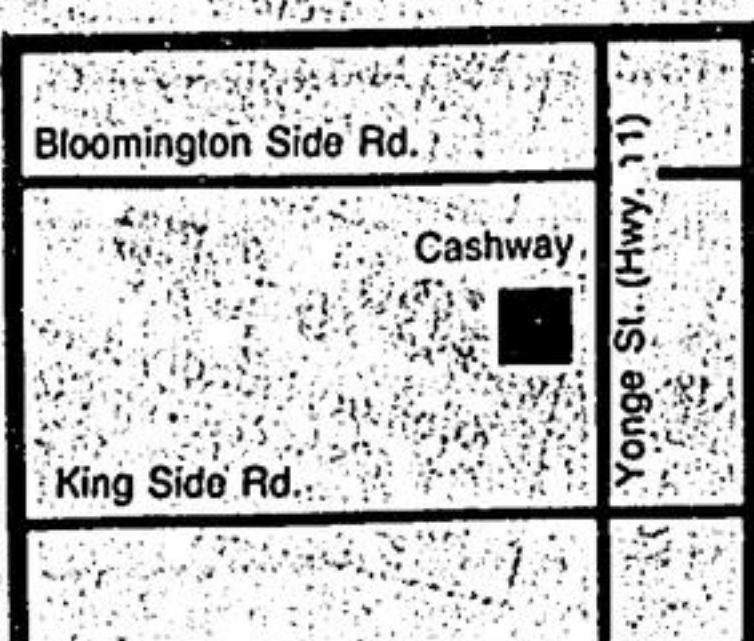

- Spring-flowering bulbs are not dormant during the winter. Rather, that is when their root systems are growing and the stem begins to travel upward, until it reaches frozen soil. Summer is the season when bulbs lie dormant and why, in Holland, they are harvested and stored until fall.
