Cattle benefits from program

Anyone talking to Mike Macbeth is quick to realize she's a woman who likes doing things her way.

It shows with her choice of cattle, raised on a farm in Uxbridge Township. The Highland breed is not all that common in Canada.

It also shows with her concern over the potential of her stock polluting a tributary of the Pefferlaw Brook.

As the name suggests, Highland cattle originated in Scotland. Similar to a muskox, the Highland cow has a double coat of thick outer hair and a fine inner hair.

Highland breeds are valued for the high quality of beef they produce.

The headwaters and tributaries of the Pefferlaw Brook are also valued as high quality habitat for resident trout populations.

Mike's concern over the cattle having access to the river when grazing led her to contact Brian Peterkin, Supervisor of Conservation Services of the Lake Simcoe Region Conservation Authority.

As an ongoing program, the Conservation Authority offers free technical advice to land owners concerning erosion control and stream improvement.

Brian's suggestion, during a site visit, included fencing the stream to restrict cattle access. Cattle could water there at a controlled access point or away from the stream at a watering station with devices such as pasture pumps.

Both the Pefferlaw Brook and cattle belonging to Uxbridge farmer Mike Macbeth (above) benefited from a program sponsored by the Lake Simcoe Region Conservation Authority. The Highland cows are less likely to pollute the stream and trout will be able to continue breeding there with a controlled access point on Mike's land.

Mike's interest in keeping the cattle completely out of the stream led to the solution of fencing the stream off and the placement of a heated watering trough for year-round use.

Total cost of the project, including labor, was $5,500.

The Conservation Authority was able to provide a grant to cover most of the costs through the Ministry of Natural Resources Angling License Incentives Program.

The Maple District of the Ministry of Natural Resources allocated $60,000 for the program to the Conservation Authority this fall for erosion and stream rehabilitation projects. Some additional costs were covered by Mike in the hooking up of the trough to an existing well and an electrical service.

Mike is pleased with the assistance the Conservation Authority provided and hopes this will encourage other land owners along the stream to protect and enhance its quality.

New challenges ahead in beef packing industries

By JOEL BAGG
Farm Management Specialist
Ministry of Agriculture and Food
Durham West

Ontario beef packers will face significant competitive challenges in the near to mid-term according to a Ministry of Agriculture and Food (OMAF) study.

These challenges are the declining supply of cattle, more efficient competitor plants, need for better beef marketing and over-capacity of plants.

It says Ontario has a low rate of capacity utilization, resulting in reduced profit margins and high costs.

The study by the OMAF Food Processing Branch was used as a background report for the Beef Marketing Task Force to determine the implications of recent developments in Alberta and U.S. beef packing industries.
