Parkview Village goes for variety

Marion Grey provided accordion music for residents of Parkview Village last week during the local facility's Variety Night. Grey, a Musselman's Lake resident, was the only imported talent to perform at the show.

STOUFFVILLE — When the Tenants' Committee of Parkview Village holds a Variety Show, the program means exactly what it says — VARIETY.

There was variety galore Wednesday night, and the audience loved it.

The emcee was Alex Coutts. The chief organizer was Jean Coughlan.

Participants included accordionist Marion Grey, violinist Bill Brodie, piper Andrew Phillips, members of the Michelle Green Dance Centre, soloist Dorothy Reesor, tap dancers Tamar and Maral Jamjekian, Scottish dancers Janine and Nicole Jeffrey and piano accompanists Mabel Williamson, Bertha Stouffer and Marion Murphy.

In addition to emceeing the show, Mr. Coutts also sang several solos and led in the singing.

The Committee hopes to organize similar programs in the months ahead.

Refreshments followed.

Another dance group from the Michelle Green Dance Centre illustrated the Roaring '20s with a hot interpretation of the Charleston, a popular dance of that era. In this photo, dance members Christine Watson, Nicole Perumchek, Chris Herle and Natalie Wood dance their way into the hearts (and memories) of Parkview Village residents.

Young Amanda Coughlan, 3, momentarily stole the show from other performers when she jumped into action at the event. Amanda, quite taken by the performances, offered her own little dance to the delight of audience members.

Scottish Highland dancer Nicole Jeffrey, 10, displayed for Parkview residents the steps involved in her form of dance. Dressed in traditional costume for the number, Nicole was all smiles during her performance.
