Students offer their work

I'm important. You're important. Everyone needs to feel important. So the question we ask ourselves is: "What makes you feel important?"

Something that makes you feel important is when you've done something good. This makes you feel important because you've achieved something. Therefore, you receive praise, which makes you feel important.

When you're recognized, you feel important because someone has seen you do something and commented on it. It gives you encouragement.

When you're really good at something, people notice and praise you on your ability. This makes you feel important.

Other things that make you feel important are: being listened to; being respected; being pampered; being loved; obtaining your driver's licence and having a girlfriend.

If you feel important, that's great. But you must make others feel important also.

Someone can be made to feel important simply by talking to him, especially if you're a popular person. You can also invite him to your house.

Never think of yourself as a nobody. If you consider yourself a loser, you should think of all the things you're good at and all the good things you've done. By the time you've collected all these thoughts, you should have a change of heart and feel pretty important.

Remember, now that you're important, try and make other people feel important too.

Friends are very important

By Kara McGinty

FRIENDS — There are three reasons why my friends are precious to me:

First, they're important to me because I can depend on them. Second, they help me when I'm in trouble. Finally, I can trust them with my secrets.

The meaning of a friend is someone with which you can share the same feelings. That, to me, is what friends are all about.

Wilderness journey a scary experience

By Lisa Hobson
Grade 10 English
Stouffville Christian School

When Mr. Hammond announced to our class we were going to spend four days and three nights in the wilderness with no electricity or heat, I was less than excited.

Twelve of us were crammed into a mini-bus for what seemed like days. We were eager to reach our destination.

Our first night at Madawaska was frightening. Anne and I were all alone, way down the hall, far, far away from the 'men.'

Anne was so tired, I think she 'passed out' as soon as she hit the pillow. But I was awake! I imagined all sorts of horrible things that I thought were about to happen to me.

Finally, crying like a baby, I bolted for the guys' room and slept outside their door.
