Neighborly notes

Violent cactus stakes its claim at Uxbridge library

"Please don't pet the cactus, it bites," reads a sign on a prickly plant in the Uxbridge Library. We did and it did!

A wildcat!

Two York Regional police officers got more than they bargained for recently when they stopped a female motorist at the interchange of Hwy. 404 and Major Mackenzie Dr. Both constables were injured by the woman's flailing feet and fists, with one officer suffering a chipped tooth and a black eye.

After the accused was placed in a cruiser, she attempted to kick out the windows. On the front seat of her car police found a 10-inch butcher knife and a crossbow. The female stands charged with impaired driving, driving while prohibited, assault with intent to resist arrest, mischief to private property and failing to stop for police.

Prior to her appearance in court, she hadn't been identified.

Undoubtedly the arresting officers aren't particularly anxious for a formal introduction.

Great loss

Clifford Poole, esteemed music director and conductor of the York Symphony Orchestra for the past 15 years, is retiring. Says Ethel Mehin a tribute to Mr. Poole: "He made participation in the Orchestra a learning experience. Their regret in seeing him leave is coupled with gratitude for what he's made them accomplish in the varied repertoire to which he exposed them; for his patience with their inadequacies; for the energy and enthusiasm he radiated to them and drew from them, and for being a thoroughly nice person to play for." That's what we call leaving on a positive note.

Cost of living

The Council of the Region of Durham have awarded themselves a five per cent wage hike for each of the next three years. This means Chairman Gary Herrema will receive $68,000 in 1989; $71,500 in 1990 and $75,000 in 1991. Councillors will earn $19,000 in 1989; $20,000 in 1990 and $21,000 in 1991. Only two of the 32 regional councillors voiced opposition to the pay hikes - Councillors Margaret Shaw and David Conway, both of Oshawa.

Help for abused is available

 the stigma which many victims of beatings and abuse are terrified of. They would rather live with the abuse than be known in their neighborhood as a battered wife or sexually abused child, she said.

Also, there is a great fear among sexually abused children that if they report what's happening the family will be broken up. "It can be a very traumatic experience for the child when it is reported," said Ms. Harper. "They can feel a great amount of guilt if the family is torn apart. The children sometimes feel it is the system (the authorities which deal with child abuse) which breaks up the family, not what the father has done."

She said that is why counselling of victims as well as offenders is crucial.

"Individual and family therapy helps them get through the crisis and deal with all the confused feelings," said Ms. Harper. "They have feelings of guilt, shame and anger, and it's important they be able to talk about it."

"Each offender has to be assessed individually," she said. "We do find that most of our offenders have been abused, but not necessarily sexually, as children. That doesn't mean though, that if you were abused you automatically grow up to be an offender."
