Third World can benefit with help from Stouffville

RONALD CONRAD

Within a few days, Whitchurch-Stouffville residents will be writing cheques to pay their water bill. But this time, they are invited to write a second cheque as well — to buy clean water for the Third World.

With Whitchurch-Stouffville's own fears of contaminated water laid to rest not long ago, Town Council recently passed a motion to aid the non-profit agency, WaterCan, through Hagerman Mennonite Church, in its work to fight water problems in developing nations.

Each year more than 25 million people, most of them children, die of diseases spread by their water supply. Others die when there is no water at all.

To help these people, WaterCan has come up with an imaginative plan: it provides leaflets which 38 Canadian municipalities have included in their citizens' water billing.

When Whitchurch-Stouffville residents receive their own in a few days, they can read about WaterCan's work. And if they wish to help, they can write a cheque to the agency, put it in the same envelope as the cheque for their water bill and send it to the Town.

The Town passes the cheques on to WaterCan, then through Canadian University Students Overseas (CUSO), the federal government matches these funds three to one. That means a gift of $10 becomes $40, a gift of $25 becomes $100 and a gift of $100 becomes $400. In addition, the original donation is tax deductible.

WaterCan channels these funds in agencies such as Oxfam, CUSO, or the Canadian Hunger Foundation (CHF). It is the latter that will put funds from the local campaign to work.

The CHF has already drawn up an in-depth proposal to link Whitchurch-Stouffville water users to water users in the southeastern part of the Dominican Republic.

The people of La Romana Province raise mostly sugar cane, and their villages tend to cluster around sugar mills. Though civic spirit is strong, villagers have not been able to improve their water supply, which is scant and often far from housing.

This is a burden to women, who here, as elsewhere in the Third World, may spend as much as three hours a day fetching water for household use and irrigation of small gardens.

What CHF proposes is a one-year project to drill five new wells and install low-tech but highly reliable Canadian hand pumps in these and 10 other wells, enhancing water supply to more than 5,000 people in 15 villages.

In past projects:

- $5 has bought one metre of pipe for a water project in Ethiopia.
- $10 has bought a water holding tank for a rudimentary water system in Chile.
- $20 has bought one length of gutter and four gutter corners for catching rain from the roof of one house in Belize.
- $45 has bought one metre of drilling for an artesian well in Nicaragua.
- $200 has paid for the restoration of a village water tank in Sri Lanka.

Ronald Conrad is a volunteer with Global Neighbors, a program of the Hagerman Mennonite Church.
