Father-son duo riding for research

BRUCE STAPLEY

Spurred on by the suffering of a friend, David and Sam Burland will set out today (Wednesday) on a cycling expedition they hope will raise $200,000 for a little-known cause.

The Aurora father and son team, who until recently lived in Stouffville, hope to ride their specially built bicycles from Edmonton to Toronto in 21 days.

Their "Iron Man Ride for Research" is being done in an attempt to bring attention - and funds - to the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS) Society of Canada.

Known more commonly as Lou Gehrig's Disease, named after the legendary baseball star, whose life it claimed, the dreaded affliction was contracted by a friend of the Burlands.

The duo have been in training for their marathon ride with three workouts a week, including 100 miles on the bikes, to prepare them for the journey.

David, 40, bought the frames, for his and Sam's bikes and built them from there, says his father, Stouffville resident Bob Burland.

David and Sam have been ardent cyclists for about three years and decided to undertake the fundraising challenge when their friend died from ALS.

The disease attacks the central nervous system, paralyzing the body, but leaving the mind and senses intact. The cause is not yet known and there is no cure.

ALS progresses quickly and death usually occurs within two to three years. According to the ALS Society, the disease "kills many Canadians each year, yet this country spends almost no money to find a cure."

The Burlands hope their efforts on behalf of ALS victims will increase public awareness and support. They will be stopping at 40 cities and towns on their 3,300-kilometre trek. Corporate sponsors and individual donors are being solicited.

Anyone interested in making a donation to the Burlands' Iron Man bike-a-thon should contact the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society of Canada at 250 Rogers Rd., Toronto, Ont. M6E 1R1 for information, call 656-5242.
