No, this isn't a false advertisement. And it's not this hungry steer could care less. He was quite happy to share this pasture with other cattle and some horses. The horse sale is on a farm on Bloomington Rd. and Kennedy Rd.

Recruits sought for police force

The York Regional Police Force is looking for new recruits. The force is hiring 44 police officers and 16 police cadets this year and is now accepting applications.

"Over the past five years, police work has changed dramatically," said York Regional Police Acting Staff Sergeant Rodney Sine in a release. "Law enforcement has been listed as one of the most interesting and challenging careers of all time. Police work cannot be compared with any other profession."

To be considered for a position, a candidate must qualify in all of the following:

AGE: To qualify for the rank of constable, you must be at least 21. For cadet, you must be at least 18.

EDUCATION: Proof of having obtained a minimum of 30 credits in the secondary school system or its equivalent.

CITIZENSHIP: Applicants must be a Canadian citizen.

CHARACTER: Good moral character and habits.

HEALTH: Excellent physical condition and able to comply with the physical and medical standards established by the York police force.

HEIGHT/WEIGHT: Weight must be proportionate to height.

VISION: 20/40 unaided correctable to 20/20 with no marked degree of red or green color blindness.

Heidi Hakonson feels she has come up with the ideal solution to that old question about getting a gift for the person who has everything.

From her Sandiford Dr. home in Stouffville, she has developed her own business, Canadian Stitchko, which designs and embroiders logos, emblems, names or even jokes, on clothing.

And there are few Stouffvillites who haven't been exposed to Mrs. Hakonson's work. Her Strawberry Festival logos have been boldly displayed on hundreds of caps and shirts bought by area residents and visitors over the past two summers.

The idea for the service came two years ago. Her husband Ed operates Choko Design, a business which designs snowmobile suits.

"Some of the dealers Ed designs for wanted personalized embroidering on their snowmobile suits," says Mrs. Hakonson. "They wanted the name of their dealership, small logos, and so on."

Mrs. Hakonson branched out from the suits and now applies her handiwork to golf shirts, marine wear, and team or business jackets.

With the help of her two-headed embroidering machine, she can either design her own patterns, or use the artwork supplied by her customers.

Designs are sent to a digitizer, who puts them on a disc, which is fed into the computerized embroidering machine. The finished product is then copied as many times as required, and is the same each time.

The machine takes note of colors, and is capable of incorporating as many as nine different shades per design.

And while she has done many jobs for Stouffville area businesses, she takes particular pride in the Strawberry Festival work.

"The festival committee had the design last year one week before the festival, and we were looking for a way to introduce ourselves to Stouffville," she says. "We copied the design, and put it on sweatshirts, Gatsby hats and T-shirts."

Mrs. Hakonson says she has used the idea for Christmas presents, and says the automated embroiderer has many applications.

"Last year, I did a table cloth when my sister got married, with the date of the wedding, the name of the couple, etc.," she says. "You can put on your own special sayings. One man could never remember the name of his son's girlfriend! He had me put her name on a sweatshirt, starting on the top with one-inch letters and going all the way down the shirt in letters that got smaller and smaller. That way, he felt he'd be sure to remember her name."
