Councillors reject gravel pit homes

Plans for a small residential subdivision in a Goodwood gravel pit have been shot down by some members of Uxbridge Township's planning and development committee.

But Barry Bushell, who chairs the committee, wants to see more discussion on the proposal before a final decision is made.

"I think we should talk about this a bit more," says Councillor Bushell, who plans to refer the item to the next planning session. "I think we turned it down too quickly — not that it will get approved mind you."

The pit site is located on the north side of Durham Region Rd. 21, east of Goodwood.

"The pit is licensed and it could start up at any time, and it's right behind houses," Councillor Bushell says. "That's what we have to talk about. I don't think we pursued it enough."

The property's owner prefers to build homes there because he feels it's better for the hamlet, Mr. Bushell says.

Regional Councillor Don Jackson says the municipality should stick with its decision to limited growth within Goodwood. Drainage problems are a major drawback to development, he says.

Ward 1 Councillor Susan Para favors a subdivision over an aggregate operation, which she feels would threaten Goodwood's environment.

Councillor Bushell feels more time is needed to address all issues relevant to the case.

"The Goodwood policy statement we brought out last year allowed for only minor extension, and whether this is minor or not and can fit within that definition is, I think, what we have to discuss."

No official application has been received by the township.
