Parkview receives new accreditation

Parkview Home for the Aged has received a federal seal of approval and once again proven their care is second to none.

The Canadian Council on Health Facilities Accreditation has awarded Parkview a three year accreditation certificate that proves the care offered is up to snuff.

The first time the home received accreditation was in 1989. "It's a mark of excellence and HOGG it's the highest we could get because it's the highest they offer," said Lloyd Hogg of Parkview.

The government survey of the facility takes two days of intensive testing and Hogg said they had been preparing for the Nov. 1991 survey since the last accreditation was approved. After each inspection the government surveyors give the facility a list of recommendations regardless of their score.

Hogg said despite getting an excellent review there is still room for improvement and the employees of Parkview will be working hard to meet the next accreditation survey in three years time.
