SDSS parking lot repairs are likely

JULIE CASPERSEN
Staff Reporter

It looks like smooth sailing for students at Stouffville District Secondary School.

Members of the student council, teachers and local trustee Harry Bowes are pushing for paving in the student parking lot.

In wet weather a portion of the lot turns to slippery mud making it dangerous to drive and difficult to park.

Council president Jen McGowan told The Weekender

last week that a number of fender benders take place in the unpaved section every year and police have been called to a couple of the more major crashes.

In the past four years the council has raised $6,000 for paving which represents half the total bill to repair the lot. A letter outlining the dangerous predicament was presented to the York Region Board of Education executive council Wednesday asking for the board to fund the balance.

Bowes said yesterday that after going over the school budget an allocation for asphalt was discovered that "might or might not be for the parking lot."

He said even if the asphalt work is not earmarked for the unpaved section, making the student parking lot safe could be deemed more necessary than repairing the existing asphalt.

"It looks as though we can get it," Bowes said, adding a final decision will be made early next week.

A contractor has been found who will complete the work before school opens in September.

Correction

In a June 26 Weekender story entitled 'Marshall appointed to York services board' Margot Marshall's tenure on Whitchurch-Stouffville council was incorrectly written. She served for three terms, a total of nine years. The Weekender regrets the error.
