

Try F5 function key to learn book's status

instance, if you are looking for the books by Farley Mowat about the woman who worked with gorillas, you can enter 'gorillas' in the subject field and Mowat in the author field and the computer will tell you where to find the book, Virunga.

Another nice trick is the F5 function key. This will tell you the status of the book. This is how you find out if the book is signed out. The only exception to this is for short term loans, which are not signed out through the computer. So, if the computer status says that a book is available, and you can't find it on the shelf, please ask at the front desk. It could be a book which is on short term loan and we can add your name to the list of reserves. There are only a few simple things to know when first using OPAC. Spelling does count. Less is best - that is, type in only a few key words. There are help notes at the top of the main menu or on the bottom of the screen. If these don't help, ask the staff

Last day for hazardous wastes

Stouffville residents who haven't yet visited the local household hazardous waste depot this week at the recreation complex can still empty their homes of old materials until 7 p.m. tonight.

In conjunction with the York Region Environmental Services Department, the town this week held its annual three-day depot which started Thursday to give local residents an opportunity to safely dispose of old paints, thinners, medicines, cleaners, batteries, oil etc.

Last year, 781 local residents turned out to help the cause, safely disposing of more than 12,960 gallons, or 60,000 litres of household hazardous wastes.
