

Lori Avenue resident frustrated with rude snowmobilers

Dear Editor, Why is it that once a beautiful white blanket of snow covers our properties, some snowmobilers feel they are entitled to trespass?

I am very angry about this because of two incidents that occurred this weekend on my property.

I am angry because on both occasions when I tried to approach the individuals who decided to jump a snowbank and circle around a tree on my front yard, they jumped back on their machines and sped away.

On Friday, Jan. 7, around 9 p.m., the first incident occurred.

Three snowmobilers approached the open field at the end of Lori Avenue and were forced to turn back because someone (possibly the owner and future developer of this field?) had closed off this entrance with snow fencing. They then made a wide circle across my lawn, less than 10 feet from my front entrance.

I ran out of the house when I was startled by the lights and noise. All three snowmobilers were stopped on Lori Avenue in front of the house waiting for the partner who had to right his machine after jumping the snowbank.

They saw me and jumped on their machines and roared off up Stouffer Street.

On Saturday afternoon, Jan. 8, once again a pair of individuals on a dark blue snowmobile decided to take the same wide loop in front of my house.

I am assuming they are the same people who did this Friday night as the snow overnight and the snowplows this morning had almost obliterated the evidence of the track from Friday night.

I ran out of the house once again and was within three feet of these "gentlemen," who turned and saw me, then
