

Spirit of Cedar Grove spokesperson will live on in new Rouge Park

Dear Editor,
On Jan. 18, one of the foremost voices of Cedar Grove, Patricia McClelland, passed away after a brief illness.

Ironically it was just a day before the Provincial Government announced its plans to create the huge Rouge Park. The irony of this lies in the fact that Pat had been one of the foremost advocates of this park and had devoted much of her life to the defence of nature and the environment in the face of industrialism and government bureaucracy.

It is hard to convey to those who didn't know Pat just how involved a life she led. A long-time cynic of government bureaucratic bungling, hers was never a negative view. Instead she always had a healthy positive belief that nature and the environment were ours to protect, not play with. This attitude led her to the forefront of the various fights to save the land both in Cedar Grove and the areas around Markham. When not fighting for nature, Pat was also noted for her efforts to bring to light the goodness of humanity through her various children's books and her journalistic work in the community.

It is impossible to measure in a few words the impact which Pat McClelland had on those who knew her. Those that didn't personally know her will come to know her spirit in the new park. In the immortal words of Pat's favorite poet, Robert Burns:

*"The voice of Nature loudly cries,
And many a message from the skies,
That something in us never dies."*

I will personally miss Pat's future thoughts and guidance. However, it is a comfort to know that her dream is gradually becoming a reality.
