

Get ready for gardening at Whitchurch-Stouffville library

The Library News which appeared in the April 17 Weekender was incorrect. Below is the correct version. The Tribune apologizes for the confusion.

DOWN TO EARTH

Now that the gardening season has picked up its grass rake and scraped away the shredded wheat of winter, books on landscaping and horticulture have become popular items with our library patrons.

If all the plans for the backyard and the front balcony come to fruition, our community will be a veritable eden of cascading flowers and voluptuous veggies this summer.

Most of our gardening books relate to propagation in Ontario, or similar climes, and offer advice to the novice and experienced gardener.

Add to this our how-to-do-it books on building planters, walkways, fences, patios and other garden structures and you can unearth all the information needed to make the garden "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Back issues of the magazines: Organic Gardening, Harrowsmith, Mother Earth News and TLC for Plants can also be checked out for a three-week loan.

They contain topical articles on cultivation, plant varieties and disease control.

CHILD CARE

From care of plants we meander on to care of child and a program which will be presented, in the library, on Friday, April 30 at 7:30 p.m.

in our community and the Support Line, which is funded by the Ministry of Community and Social Services, is anxious to meet with parents who have views or questions on the subject.

United Way seeks top volunteer

The United Way of York Region is seeking its volunteer of the year.

Charities throughout the region are being asked to participate in the selection process; and nominations must arrive at the United Way office before June 4.

Sponsored by the York Region United Way and the Allstate Foundation, the Douglas E. Lear Memorial Award for outstanding volunteer work is presented annually. The winner best exemplifies the spirit of Mr. Lear's service to the community in a human care setting. A cash award of $500, donated by Allstate is part of the prize.

Last year's winner was Sandra Sillcox of King Township.

Volunteers of all registered charities in York Region are being urged to put several names forward for consideration.

A panel of judges from the United Way and Allstate will be formed to select the winner. The award will be presented on June 28 at the United Way's annual meetings, being held at the Cardinal Golf Club in Newmarket.

Entry forms can be obtained from the United Way offices or by calling 474-9974.

York Region police to get tough on seatbelts

The crunch is on for seat belt abusers.

Last week York Regional Police offered motorists who disobeyed the buckle-up law a grace period. Between April 8 and 17, 699 warning tickets were handed to motorists for seat belt violations.

Motorists don't have to pay a fine for these warning tickets, but during a provincial enforcement campaign lasting until the end of April, officers will hand out genuine tickets for seat belt infractions.
