Save your dog a lot of heartache

Few things are as exciting as bringing home a puppy for the first time. Most become instant family members, pampered and adored by children and adults alike. But while your dog may think he can exist merely on your love and attention, the fact is that puppies have their own special health needs.

Your puppy's health and fitness depend upon your attentiveness, which includes knowing when to consult your veterinarian. Only your veterinarian can treat for and help prevent parasites that can seriously affect the health of your dog. Heartworms, roundworms and hookworms, for example, are common parasites found throughout North America. Hookworms and roundworms are particularly dangerous to puppies.

Every single dog in this country is at risk of heartworm disease. Because it is carried by mosquitoes, there are common misconceptions that dogs are at risk only during the warmer seasons; only outdoors, and only in southern regions of the United States.

But your dog can contract heartworms anywhere there are mosquitoes, both indoors and outdoors, and at any time of the year.

Once transmitted to a dog, heartworms can grow up to 14 inches in length. These mature worms can cause severe and potentially fatal damage to the heart, lungs and other vital organs. Warning signs, such as fatigue, chronic cough, and loss of appetite, do not typically appear until the disease is in an advanced stage.
