

Water project remains on hold

The town will defer a decision on proceeding with the Ballantrae/Musselman Lake water project until it is known how much the region will contribute.

The decision was made at council's last meeting, held in Latham Hall. While the locale was different, the meeting was typically combative.

Lemonville resident Dave Probert said a petition from 50 landowners and residents will be given to the town advising that they have requested an investigation by the ministry of municipal affairs regarding the presentation of documents from August to October 1994." Musselman Lake resident Fiona Fox raised a number of concerns, first stating that town population projections for the area had been inconsistent.

Fox challenged town engineer Tom Parry to say what percentage of those who voted yes were actual residents and what were landowners. Parry replied that assessment was done strictly on the basis of landowners.

"If the existing residents overwhelmingly said no to this project," said Fox, "but the developers carried the day then we have an issue where existing residents aren't deciding."

Parry pointed out that the larger property owners would be paying the most.

"If you keep playing games we are going to lose the 67 per cent," said Councillor Nick Tatone, referring to the available grant money for the project.

"Then the town will have to deal with another issue, which is health," said councillor Ivanka Bradley.
