

Happy Valentine's Day

February 14, a celebration of love since the Middle Ages

Since the Middle Ages, lovers have traditionally celebrated love and romance on the 14th of February. Legend has it that in Ancient Rome, imprisoned martyr St. Valentine, wrote a farewell love note on the day of his death. February 14, signed "from your Valentine." Ever since, the date has been consecrated as the day for the celebration of love and for lovers to exchange expressions of their affection.

Although St. Valentine gave his name to this lovely tradition centuries ago, even the least sentimental people exchange a simple token on this day - a perfumed note, flowers or a gift of fine chocolate.

Those who are more enthusiastic may prefer quite lavish tokens of their love, such as bestowing bouquets of red long-stemmed roses or even exquisite jewelled hearts.

The giving of heart-shaped keepsakes on Valentine's Day started in the 1850s and has been popular ever since. But, the heart shape was not always synonymous with love. It originally symbolized the soul to the Ancient Greeks and Egyptians. It was only in the Middle Ages that the heart became an emblem of love and romance, first symbolizing man's love for God then expressing an idealized kind of love between man and woman. Later, the heart symbol was incorporated into the rituals of romance and courtship. Today, with the return of things romantic, the Valentine's Day tradition calls for meaningful gifts of love. Also important when presenting one's gift, is selecting the right moment. Create a special mood. Whether it's a candlelight dinner or a quiet stroll in a wintry garden, the right setting can make the act of giving even more romantic for unforgettable memories.
