Angus Glen Golf Club set to open in May

As the golfing season approaches, aficionados of the sport will have yet another prime choice at which to play the game, within Markham's boundaries. Unionville's Angus Glen Golf Club, a 225-acre course, opens this May and has "been recognized as one of the best new courses in Canada," says the club's director of golf, Kevin Thistle. "It's a championship golf course and the first high-end public course in the area," he continues. Three years in the making, the facility was the brain child of Arthur Stollery, owner of Angus Glen Farm, on which part of the course is built. Recently deceased, Mr. Stollery's children, Gordon Stollery and Laurie MacLachlan, are the present owners and Thistle says, "They're very happy with the end result and their father would have been proud to see his 20-year dream realized."

Angus Glen is an 18-hole, par 72, 7,300 yard facility which offers a mix of design features to challenge the recreational and more serious golfer.

The substantial fairways, bent grass hollows surrounding the greens, 108 sand traps filled with white Ohio sand, excellent driving range, eight target greens and a putting green, make the club (Please see page 17)
