A Fine Balancing Act

money CLIPS

A well balanced investment portfolio is not unlike a well balanced diet. Both should provide, comfort, stability and room for growth regardless of age.

An experienced nutritionist will recommend that a commonsense diet is the best course to follow. A financial analyst will recommend that the best approach for a balanced investment portfolio is to spread out your investments, be prudent in which ones you choose and stay away from "hot" tips and speculation that is not supported by experienced and sound research.

"Hot" tips are like junk food calories. They are aggressively hyped, burn up at varying speeds, won't provide any lasting value and will probably keep you awake at night. When you are given a "hot" tip that someone has discovered a new diamond deposit in the Northwest Territories or has struck oil in Indonesia, beware of glitzy packaging! It may be too good to be true.

Every investor must wrestle with the concept of "comfort level." This is the point at which you lose sleep or suffer anxiety attacks because your total financial future is locked into one form of investment or another. If you are going to invest and build a sound portfolio only do so when you are buffered by the bounds of your comfort level. In other words only invest what you can afford.

No investment is worth nights of tossing and turning or days filled with hand wringing.

Hagerman/Greenfield are not investment brokers or stock promoters. We are Chartered Accountants who have seen it all from the conservative to the fly-by-the-seat-of-their-pants investor.

While we will never recommend which investment you should consider we are well qualified and experienced to analyze the state of your holdings and comment on the health of your finances. Having an objective, professional opinion is invaluable when it comes time to plan your financial future.

Of course fortunes have been made over night, based upon a snap decision, but without question more have been lost for the very same reason.

Call Robert D. Hagerman C.A. or Jeffrey G. Greenfield C.A. for a personal consultation. The first appointment is free. The time you spend with professionals, who have made a career of advising hundreds of satisfied clients, could be the best investment you will ever make. Call today!
