

Town must be more open: Businesses

Chamber executive member Eric Paszat of Cable Tech Co. Ltd. suggested the town should be asked if it prefers commercial or residential growth. "We must ask council, 'What do you want this town to be, a residential haven or a centre for industry? Are we interested in business or not?'"

The luncheon, which took place at Angie's Eatery, was held to gather issues and concerns from local business in preparation for a June 26 meeting involving the chamber executive and council.

Several in attendance suggested town staff were difficult to deal with or vague when they were looking to obtain licencing or information to further develop their businesses. It was noted staffers often take an adversarial stance when dealing with businesses looking to expand their facilities.

Janet Davies of Cedar Beach Park said she and her family were constantly having to inform town staff as to past development agreements made with the town. "We bring in 540 families a year to town. But we're constantly being given a hassle by the town," said Davies. Chamber president Rob Shannon suggested the chamber could be of help to businesses looking to work through the red tape of development. "I think that's one way in which the chamber can help. It can be very frustrating," said Shannon.

Lebovic said it was large companies like his that made it difficult for small companies to gain concessions when negotiating with the town. "They (the town) are very unreasonable. They are used to winning. For me to give another $50,000 for 100 lots isn't going to affect my lifestyle. But it's going to make a big difference for the little guy."

Lebovic suggested it's difficult to win concessions at group, which continues today, and didn't stop there. This summer's eighth session will see about 135 students from around the world take courses.

Richards grew up in Ballantrae and attended school in Stouffville before his family moved to Markham in the early 1970s.

He attended Markham District High School, graduating in 1977, and then went on to study engineering, physics and space science at Ryerson Polytechnic University, University of Toronto and Cornell University.

the town or regional level because of a preoccupation with such things as the environment and animal rights. "You have to make sure you don't disturb the deer or the tomatoes. People are on the bottom of the list."
