Bestseller list great way to stay on top of world of books

Each Saturday we update our fiction and nonfiction list of national best-sellers from the weekly compilation that's published in the Globe and Mail.

Most major newspapers and periodicals publish book lists and they have a strong influence on the reading public, especially in its selection on fiction titles. People want to read best-selling fiction. The most influential book list in North America is the one published in the New York Times.

It first appeared without fanfare in 1942 under the heading The Best Selling Books Here and Elsewhere and has appeared in every Sunday edition since then. Authors who reach the top of this list stake a claim on the mother lode in the publishing field.

Many titles which held the number one position five decades ago are still in publication.

The Robe by Lloyd Douglas, which was top fiction in '42 was on the Times chart a record 157 weeks.

Two years later, Forever Amber,

the predecessor of the (Please see page 12)
