Children respect strict disciplinarian as their classroom teacher

Question: I have observed that elementary school and junior high school students, even high schoolers, tend to admire teachers who are more strict. Is this your experience as well?

Dr. Dobson: Yes, teachers who maintain order are often the most respected members of the faculty, provided they aren't mean and grouchy. A teacher who can control a class without being oppressive is almost always loved by his or her students. One reason is that there is safety and order. When a class is out of control, particularly at the elementary school level, the children are afraid of each other. If the teacher can't make the class behave, how can she prevent a bully from doing his thing? How can she keep the students from ridiculing one of their less able members?

Second, children love justice. When someone has violated a rule, they want immediate retribution. They admire the teacher who can enforce an equitable system. By contrast, the teacher who does not control the class inevitably allows crime to pay, violating something basic in the value system of children.

Third, children admire strict teachers because chaos is nerve-racking. Screaming, hitting and wiggling are fun for about 10 minutes, then the confusion begins to get tiresome and irritating. I have smiled in amusement many times as Grade 2s and 3s astutely evaluated the relative disciplinary skills of their teachers.

They know how a class should be conducted. I only wish all of their teachers were equally aware of this.
