Black missed the moor mark

Dear Editor,
I always enjoy the refreshing humor of Arthur Black.

However I must take him to task under his article "Is the Monarchy safe?"

Firstly it is not the Beast of Bodwin Moor but BODMIN Moor and that it is not an area "not far from Cornwall" it is in Cornwall and part of that county.

I suggest that Arthur would not have made these errors if he had checked his geography prior to his statements.

Bodmin Moor was made famous in Daphne Du Maurier's book "Jamaica Inn", where local smugglers made the inn their headquarters.

The Inn still exists but not in its original state, having been altered and refurbished and is now a Tourist Trap.

In addition to the legend of the Ravens guarding the Tower of London, it is said that as long as the monkeys exist on the Rock of Gibraltar it will remain British.

Sincerely,
Adam Johnstone
