

Christopher Jackson named as new gallery director

By JOAN RANSBERRY

The Latcham Gallery's new director-curator brings more than a decade of know-how to the job.

Whitchurch-Stouffville's chief librarian Marilyn Ferguson announced that Christopher Jackson is the local gallery's new curator recently.

Jackson worked in the art department at Calgary's Glenbow Museum for 10 years. When he left Alberta a year ago, he was the museum's senior curator of art for the museum.

During the past year, Jackson held a teaching position at Sheridan College.

"I am very excited about the opportunities at the Latcham Gallery," said Jackson. "Community galleries offer the chance to deal directly with the people they serve through their exhibitions, program and related activities.

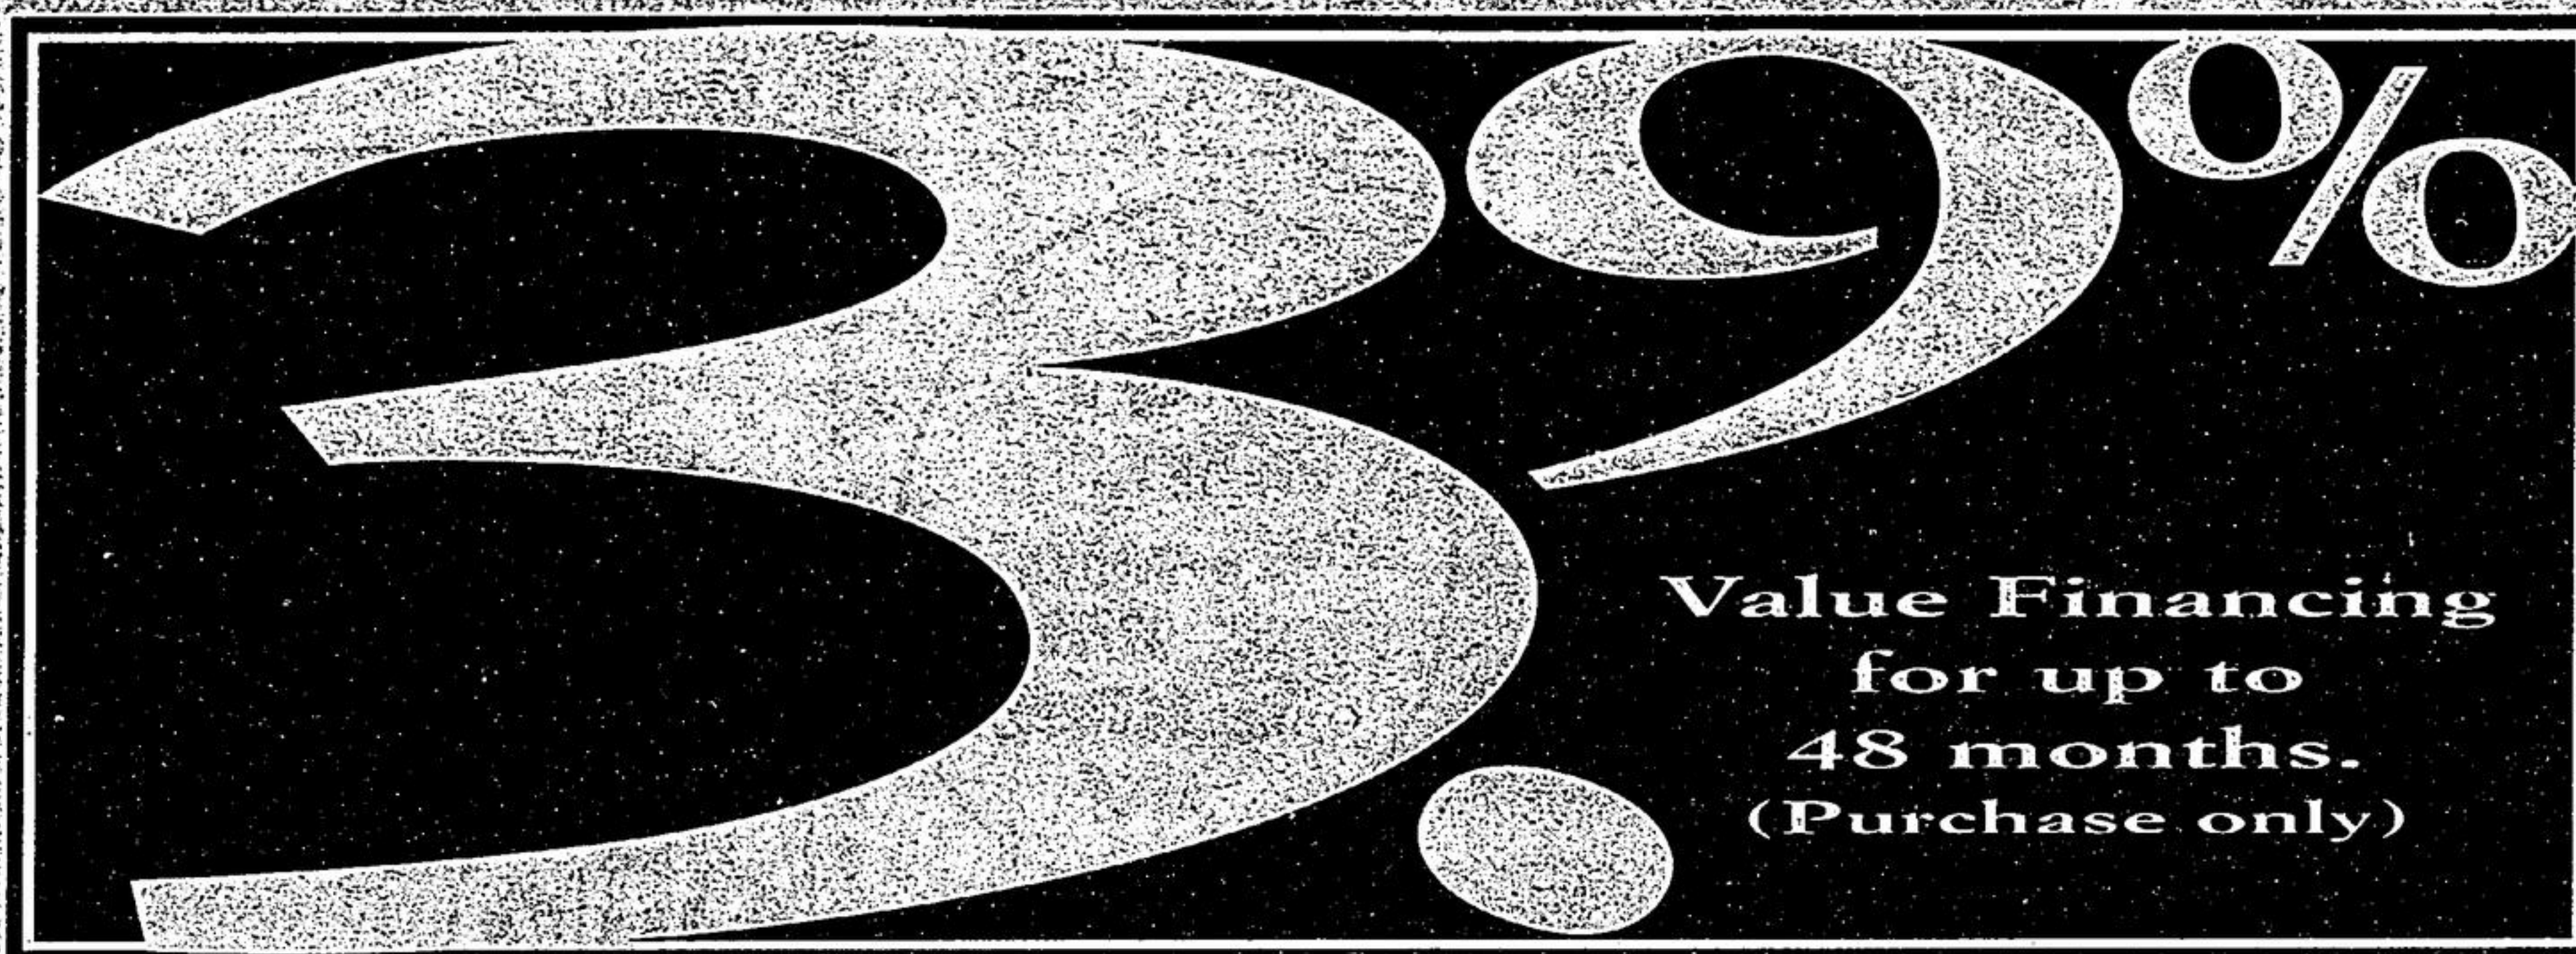

The feedback is immediate and you know exactly where you stand. If you are doing your job, the gallery becomes a focus of community activity."

The Latcham Gallery is a program of the Whitchurch-Stouffville Library Board.

It currently presents eight exhibitions a year, featuring artists and craftspeople from both the local area and across the province.
