Installing smoke detector cuts down on deaths

It's time to make your home a healthier place to live. Just like its human inhabitants, your home must breathe clean, fresh air to be healthy. You can monitor your home's air supply by installing electronic carbon monoxide detectors - placed near primary sleeping areas - to warn you when hazardous levels build up. Schedule regular maintenance for all gas appliances (the furnace, water heater, stove, clothes dryer, etc.) and have your chimney and flue cleaned professionally. Install smoke alarms on each level of your home. Replace all smoke alarms which have been in operation for ten years or longer. Replace the batteries yearly. Keep a list of emergency telephone numbers near the phone. Create an emergency fire escape route and practice drills regularly. Get rid of lead - high concentrations of it can cause learning and behavioral problems and physical disabilities in children. It's also harmful to pregnant women.
