Babysitting a popular pastime in town

Stouffville has been tagged with many titles: Magic Town, Music Town, Flea Market Town. However, our library statistics clearly show that our community could just as easily assume the mantle of Babysitters Town of Ontario.

The library has been running babysitting classes for more than 13 years.

At a rough count, this means that the library has already released more than 700 qualified boys and girls into the communal babysitting pool. Some of the graduates from the first classes are now babysitting their own children.

The popularity and reputation of the course is well-deserved. It is set and certified by the Safety Council of Canada, taught by a nursing professional and gives participants the confidence and knowledge to handle babysitting responsibilities.

The spring program, which started this week, had a full registration almost before the winter one ended.

We weren't able to accommodate everyone who wanted to join and, unfortunately, another session isn't scheduled to begin until the fall.

To compensate, we have set up two St. John Ambulance courses for babysitters: What Every Babysitter Should Know and Emergency First Aid for Kids.

These one-day workshops, for youngsters 11 years and over, will be held August 20 and 21. The classes, taught and certified by St. John Ambulance staff, emphasize hands-on activities designed to build confidence and expertise in caring for children.

Each course costs $35 per student. Registration forms and further information are available at the library.
