

Markham Stouffville Hospital launches page on the internet

Markham Stouffville Hospital has gone live on the internet, starting on May 10, with its own web page providing information world-wide on hospital services.

The hospital's web page has been specifically designed to provide easy access for many interest groups with information that will appeal to both medical and non-medical internet users.

"We wanted to ensure that anyone who was accessing the hospital's web page would find the information useful," said Cindy Draycott, director of information and technology.

So we have included a broad range of clinical and non-clinical information."

Information that will be available includes patient care services, corporate information such as mission/values, operating plan summaries, community information, employment information, and the admission criteria.

Community members will be able to read about workshops and seminars being offered, find names and telephone numbers of physician specialists and family physicians, and link up with other health networks.

"The internet is another vehicle for communicating what is happening at the hospital and how to reach specific departments. Effective communication is vital to keeping the community informed and we feel this will enhance our communication," said Draycott.

Linkages with other health related web sites have been established to provide access to a broader range of health care information. Health links include York Region District Health Council, University of Toronto - Faculty of Medicine, Hospital Web, Healthy Ways, and Interactive Pregnancy Calendar.
