

Old meets new as books and computer technology mix

The giant book sale continues. If you missed the main book sale weekend, don't despair.

packed away some are available for purchase. The price is definitely a bargain at $1 per bag... that's grocery bag size.

Although most books have been

Most of the books are fiction in hardcover and paperback formats.

Of course, some people may consider these collectibles, seeing as how the book can be considered "old" technology. At least, that's how it sounds if you listen to someone in the glow of the new computer technology. There's the excitement of surfing the Net, CD-ROM with pictures, hypertext, sound cards, video clips.

What is all this stuff? Drop into the library on Wednesday, June 4, at 7:30 p.m. when there will be a discussion of this new technology and its place in public libraries.

How firm are the walls of the library? Are we ready to be hopping to virtual infosites. Do we really want to go? Better, yet, can we find our way back?

"Every part of the Net is permeable by every other part, and every item is potentially right next to all others. For that reason, Net catalogues, or "search engines", can't just show the assigned location of an item; they must also be able to group items together around a string of search terms that may never recur again."

(Globe and Mail, March 11, 1997)

Confused? Get in on the June 4 discussion. Librarian Catherine Sword, will give a quick introduction to library service to give a starting point. From that point, we'll have a quick jump around the Net, demonstrating typical public library reference questions, and then end with an open discussion. Don't worry. Nobody will get lost as Matthew Hutchinson, computer instructor/consultant, will be assisting in the guided tour.

We are hoping for a wide range of people to participate in this discussion. So if you're a computer enthusiast, or nervous about computers, or curious about technology or not too keen on technology, drop in for the discussion. It's going to be fun. If you have any questions, call Catherine at the library, 640-2395.

Have your say

Were you affected by our recent elementary school labour dispute? If so, we'd like to hear from you in order to find ways to strengthen our relationships and communication within our system and within the community.

You're invited to respond to the following questions:

1. What were the major issues in the recent elementary school labour dispute? How were you as an individual affected by these issues?
2. What were your sources of information during the elementary school labour dispute?
3. What have you learned from the experience that can help the board (senior administration and trustees) and the Federations:
 - a) support for our teachers?
 - b) promote confidence in public education?
 - c) foster trust and mutual respect?
 - d) improve communications?
4. What one final message would you most like the special task force to consider?
