Teacher faces sexual charge

A York Region Board of Education teacher who is alleged to have had a two-month affair with one of his students, has been charged by police with sexual exploitation.

David Peckham, 45, the Unionville High School computer science department head, was fired outright Thursday evening, said board public affairs officer Brian Jamieson.

Peckham, of Markham, was arrested by York

Regional Police Wednesday, after the 17-year-old girl's parents lodged the complaint with police.

"Sexual exploitation is when a person in a position of trust and authority has sex with someone between the ages of 14 and 18," said Sgt. John Sheldon, adding Peckham was also the girl's tutor.

"Between March and April of this year, the accused had a sexual relationship with a student. It was a consensual relationship, however, the parents brought the complaint forward to police who subsequently laid charges," Sheldon said. He added while the girl didn't file the complaint, she cooperated in the investigation.

Jamieson said Peckham, who had been employed by the board since 1972, was dismissed with cause.

Although the case has not yet been heard in court, "this teacher was found guilty of unacceptable conduct. The trust between an educator and a student is sacred," Jamieson said. "He violated that trust, violated his professional obligation and our moral and ethical and professional standards. As a result he is no longer working for us."

The criminal charge of sexual exploitation carries a maximum jail term of five years. Peckham will appear in Newmarket Provincial Court June 6.

The high school houses Arts York, a regional program attended by students from throughout York Region, including Stouffville.
