

Summer drought is hard on even most hardy plants

Let's Get Growing

Marjorie Mason Hogue

It is now the middle of summer and unlike last year, our gardens are suffering greatly from drought.

After a cold but dry spring we have had a slightly cooler but very dry summer. Except where there are patches of clover, my grassy walkways are golden brown — it makes one wonder why we don't plant more clover.

Even some of the usually drought-tolerant plants are in difficulty. A stroll through my rather crispy xeriscape (unwatered garden) showed some plants are still real performers: Scabiosa ochroleuca — a tall lemon-yellow pincushion flower; Origanum 'Herrenhauser' — an ornamental oregano; Achillea 'Parker's Variety' — a four-foot-tall yarrow with five-inch-wide heads of golden bloom; Sedum maximum atropurpureum standing three feet tall with deep burgundy foliage soon to be crowned by clusters of pink blooms; Eupatorium rugosum, a shorter white flowered version of Joe-Pye-Weed which tolerates dry shade very well and, of course, lavender and creeping thyme.

Most at risk are newly-planted trees and shrubs which don't show signs of stress until they suddenly die.

The shredded cedar mulch which usually keeps my soil moist has dried so much that an hour of sprinkling simply moistens the mulch rather than penetrating the soil — at least two hours is needed in each location.

Most at risk this summer are newly-planted trees and shrubs which often don't show signs of stress until they suddenly die.

Monica Jans was wondering if the use of a bark chip mulch would prevent natural seeding of perennials and biennials. I'm afraid this is one of the drawbacks of using bark mulches.

Just as it prevents weed germination, so it hinders sprouting of desirable seeds. However, the use of a gravel mulch actually encourages the reseeding of both the desirables and the undesirables.

Cathy Dymond asks about the best winter mulch to protect perennials. Fortunately, the best fall mulch is absolutely free. It's the same one that Mother Nature uses in her forests — simply leaves, preferably chopped up and applied two-to-three inches deep and topped with compost or rotted manure.

This mulch should be placed on the garden in November after growth has ceased.

Its purpose is not to keep the plants warm, but to keep the soil frozen and to prevent it from thawing during winter's mild spells.

Straw, shredded cedar or forest mulch are excellent summer mulches applied in early to mid June. They will conserve moisture, prevent weeds and eventually break down and become soil.

Lois Burkholder asked if I would comment on my favorite books for Canadian gardeners.

Two tree and shrub books that I find particularly helpful are Gardening With Trees and Shrubs by Trevor Cole of Ottawa (Whitecap Books) and Lois Hole's Favourite Trees and Shrubs (Lone Pine Publishing).

Lois lives in Alberta and only discusses very hardy plants.

If you are wondering about a suitable question or comment to allow you access to the Box of Bulbs Contest simply send your name, address and title of your favorite gardening book, either your old stand-by or your newest find.
