that Fred yelled "throw open the doors." We opened the doors to get (the people) in. There were so many people, there was traffic both ways.

Over 30,000 people came through the gates the first year.

Two hundred vendors marketed their products to the consumers.

ers of three-day show limit the number of vendors for each product.

And the planning stage is also longer. While the first show was put on in four months, staff now start working on the following year's show, one week after the first one ends.

Fifteen-years later ...

Now, 15-years later, people are still attending the show that has country charm and city sophistication.

"It has become part of the community," said Cox.

While the show gets better every year, the goal of it hasn't changed.

The goal is "to bring the finest products under one roof."

People are able to see over 300 vendors displaying the best products and services. Organiz-

The finest products, entertainers and demonstrations

The show, which encourages community involvement, puts on Centre Stage - an area where high school bands play, local groups sing or dance and professionals give their advice.
