Don't just drive vehicle, check trunk, seats, under the hood and more

■ From page 18 ■

the car has the acceleration and stability needed for safe highway driving

Don't just get in and drive away. Do a walk-around with the salesperson and insist that he or she explain its features. Never overlook the technical stuff - if you don't understand, ask what the benefits are.

And don't forget the trunk. How high is the liftover? How wide is the opening?

Once inside the car, examine the controls and be certain they're easily reachable.

Pay special attention to the seats - ease of adjustment and side support.

Check for little details like door-pockets and cupholders.

If you're short, look for a seat height adjuster so you won't be peering over the wheel in a sit-up-and-beg position.

Make your road test count. Observe how the transmission reacts, the steering responds and the brakes feel.

Try a few curves, checking the car's handling and seek a bumpy road to measure ride characteristics.

Acceleration is important, not the stoplight variety but passing ability, especially on the highway.

And while you're out here, observe whether vision to the rear is limited and if the car is unstable in crosswinds or passing large trucks.
