

CLIFF DUNKELD

Ontario Amateur Softball Association. Now retired after spending 29 years of service with the Works department at Durham Region, Dunkeld pointed out that he now has even more time for council duties.

Dunkeld serves on five committees and boards. He's a director on the Markham-Stouffville Hospital, a board member on the Whitchurch-Stouffville Museum, the Parks and Recreation and he's on a number of community centre boards.

"Also, I will continue to promote well-planned growth. It includes taking a positive look at all industrial and commercial (businesses) wishing to locate in town. Of course, I'd like to keep our country atmosphere by protecting our present and proposed new park areas," said Dunkeld.

Promising "full time" representation and leadership in Ward 5, candidate Judy Saabas has a clearly defined platform: she's against building a new municipal building.

"I don't believe it's wise for council to spend any money on a new municipal building that many be obsolete in three years."

Saabas is in favor of a multi-use indoor pool facility. As a homemaker, Saabas said she's able to give council her "full time" attention.

The political hopeful wants to see the library expanded, a facelift for Main Street, improved road surfacing in the old village area and a new official plan for Stouffville.

As well, the environment matters to Saabas. "Environmental issues should not be looked at as an obstacle to forgo growth," she said.

The voters are quick to tell the candidate what they think of their government, said Saabas.

"People are telling me that they don't know who their councillors is. Also, I'm told that our council does not have a grip on things. Instead, people think the decisions are being made by others... by people not on council".

Saabas, 35, is married to Paul. The couple has two children. The family has lived in Stouffville for 11 years.

JUDY SAABAS

ward 5

Ward 5 incumbent Judy Scala arrives on the voters' door steps armed with a three-year action plan.

In her quest for re-election, Scala is stressing the continuance and stability of the town.

Local government has to continue with a plan of action to "acknowledge and realize where we, the people of Whitchurch-Stouffville, want to be in the overall picture of municipal restructuring," said Scala.

Scala, 50, comes to the election campaign with a record of community involvement. And, in her career as a communication specialist with a Canadian-owned company, Scala's proud of her people skills. She said she "listens" and she "understands" the people.

In her role on council, Scala was on the local BIA board, the mayor's youth committee, a community centre board as well as a high school committee board.

Scala's on the board of directors of a local church, on the executive of a parent-teacher group and she's co-chairman of the Stouffville's Secondary Plan.

To improve communications within Ward 5, Scala plans to produce a newsletter. As well, she's promising to hold the occasional informal meeting session giving the residents a "chance to take part in the governing of their town."

KOSTANDOFF, Mark
Councillor, Ward 6

As Ward 6 Councillor for the past three years, Mark Kostandoff has fought for:

- Fiscal responsibility
- Holding the line on taxes
- Balanced growth
- Attracting new business to town
- Economic development and the founding of the Stouffer Vision Fund
- Broader-based recreational facilities
- Improved library facilities
- Greater attention to traffic concerns
- More research into the cost effectiveness of investing in and restoring existing town hall space rather than simply building new.

Most importantly, as an international relations and economics graduate of the University of Toronto, Mark understands the need for diplomacy and cooperation if government is to move forward. Throughout his term, he has done his best to take this approach, working as a team player and a thoughtful contributor to local Council.

Mark, his wife Kate and their two children value this community, with its unique small town flavour. And while they welcome growth, they believe the town must take a balanced and cautious stand, aiming for a healthy mix of business and residential development. Mark views his willingness to stand for a second term in Council as a way in which he and his family can commit to their home town and invest in its future.

On November 10, share this vision by making your mark. Vote Mark Kostandoff Councillor, Ward 6.

You can reach Mark at 640-8943.
