Puzzles proved popular; check out these books

LIBRARY NEWS

The Library Week puzzles proved to be their usual stumpers, although only one of the puzzles was unsolved by the end of the week.

The Cat in the Hat has left the building and taken whatever was under his hat with him.

That left three puzzles and, to be frank, we were impressed that so many people figured out the answer. All the correct answers were put into a box and one winner was drawn for each puzzle.

Joseph Orsetto is the winner of Where's Waldo, and Jillian Goodbrand named the puzzling storybook character.

Of course, for the gummy bears, no one actually picked the exact number, but Spencer Crowe was the closest, being off by one gummy bear.

These were tough puzzles. Congratulations to all the winners and certainly all the participants deserve a pat on the back for their good, and sometimes creative, solutions.

If you like puzzles, you don't have to wait another year until the next Library Week celebrations.

We have many puzzling stories to keep you busy. For the very young, who like the hunt for Waldo searches, try:

Jane Yorke, A Mouse in the House; April Wilson, Look! the Ultimate Spot the Difference Book and Look again! the Second Ultimate Spot the Difference Book; Wendy Madgwick, Behold! Spot the Difference Bible Stories;

Philippe Dupasquier, Andy's Pirate Ship; Steve Parker, Dinosaurs: A Spot the Difference Puzzle Book; and the series of I Spy books.

When your children are ready for a more difficult challenge try:

Phil Roxbee Cox, Whatever Happened to Professor Potts?;

Who Stole the Black Diamond? follow the clues to unravel the mystery;

Sarah Dixon, The Vanishing Village;

Martin Oliver's, Agent Arthur series;

Tony Allan, Mystery on Main Street; and Mark Fowler, The Invisible Spy.

First-ever gong show hits stage

There are people who have always wanted to perform, but who were unable to find an agent astute enough to recognize their subtle talents, and some of them will be on stage tonight (Saturday) in the first annual Stouffville Gong Show.

The event takes place at Latham Hall. Doors open at 7:30 p.m., the lunacy begins at 8 p.m. and admission is $10.

The event is open to adults aged 19 and over and a cash bar will be available throughout the evening, with a complimentary snack served at 11 p.m.

All proceeds go to the Clock Tower Theatre Fund.

For tickets call 640-4375 or 887-0977.
