"Fences should be horse-high, sheep-tight and bull strong."

While that maxim held true for hundreds of years - and, in some situations, still does - today's fences usually must fulfill different requirements.

Now most homeowners typically want a fence built for privacy and to keep kids and Spot out of neighbour's yard.

When planning your fence, check local building codes. A setback of a certain distance from your property line is likely to be required. Often there are restrictions on the height of the fence and building materials that can be used. Be sure to locate underground utilities before you lay out the fence and start digging postholes.

Take the time to consider all your options, weighing the advantages and disadvantages of Wood is still the most common type of fence material.
