UP CLOSE AND PERSONAL

He struck a chord and put Goodwood on the map

MARLENE MCCARTY
Correspondent

He's been described as "the best thing that ever happened to Goodwood," an "absolute genius," and "a remarkable teacher who gives so much of himself to the kids."

The recipient of these, and many similar accolades, is 31-year-old teacher, Lyle Corrigan.

Married, and the father of three young daughters, the Uxbridge resident, who describes his days as "tiring, but fun," is not only the grade seven teacher at Goodwood Public School, but is also the school's much-loved music teacher and the inspiration behind an extraordinary musical success story.

Shortly after his arrival at Goodwood, Corrigan, in a discussion with former school principal Stan Todd, asked, "What do you want of me — of the band?" The principal replied, "Put Goodwood on the map."

Corrigan accepted the challenge, and today, just three-and-a-half years later, having attained local, regional, and national acclaim, the Goodwood Public School Band is, indeed, "on the map." With the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from York University, and a B.E. from Nipissing Teacher's College, Corrigan brought his combined love and enthusiasm for music and teaching to the children of Goodwood.

Corrigan remembers his first year at Goodwood (1994-95) as a "learning year." That year saw the grades seven and eight music students combine to form a 35-member band. Some of those students had some musical background; others had no musical training whatsoever. "It was a year," he says, "in which I got my bearings, honed my own musical skills, and got to know the students."

The following year, Corrigan decided on a different approach: in February, 1996 he entered the band — which had now grown to 46 members — in the Sunderland Music Festival, and, far exceeding all expectations, they received the Gold Standard (level of excellence) award!

Four days later, the band entered The Southern Ontario Band Festival in Scarborough, where they received the Silver Standard. A month-and-a-half later, accepting an invitation to enter the national finals in Toronto, the Goodwood Public School Band, competing with bands across the country, walked away with bronze!

At this point, Corrigan said he — and the kids — realized that "something big is happening here." They (the kids) were now "arin' to go." They practiced after school, during lunch breaks, weekends, and during Christmas holidays — as well as the normal twice-a-week practices.

All this enthusiasm and hard work paid off the following year — 1997. Entering the same festivals again — Sunderland, Southern Ontario, and the national finals, in Ottawa — they won gold, gold, and silver, respectively.

By then the band — having grown to 55 members — had become an "entity"
