does, though the speed-sensitive steering is a little too power-assisted for my taste.

But then, since I've practically gushed over this truck all through the story, you know I've gotta find something to complain about. After all, this vehicle is a classic example of the automotive overkill that Greenpeace tree-huggers love to hate. Yes, it's overpriced and overpowered. We could get into mileage numbers but to make it really simple, think of it this way: Every kilometer you drive in this truck will cost you about a dime at the gas pumps.

But this really isn't about practicality. This is about a luxurious lifestyle statement with the built-in security of all-weather, go-anywhere ability. I guess the best way to sum up Ford's latest full-size SUV is to end with a quote from

The Navigator has the signature Lincoln grill

Lincoln brand manager, Bill Lenn. "With the Navigator, we've made luxury standard," he said. "Adventure is optional."
